INFORMATION ON SHANGHAI INDUSTRIES, 1949 - 1953

Comment: This report on Shanghai industries is based on a survey of Chinese Communist newspapers and periodicals from late 1949 through early 1953. The report gives, in outline form, the names of the plants, their locations, products, installations, and other available pertinent information. The plants are listed according to the following categories: (1) iron and steel plants, (2) production equipment and parts plants, (3) electrical equipment and parts plants, (4) scientific instruments and apparatus firms, (5) transport equipment and parts, (6) radio equipment plants, (7) wire manufacturing plants, and (8) miscellaneous plants.

For convenient reference, the names and issue dates of publications from which information was extracted are given in parentheses following each item of information.

During the period of liberation, only 30 percent of the plants in Shanghai were in operation but by mid-November 1949, 60 percent of the plants reopened. Immediately after this period, falling prices led to a general market decline. As a solution to this adverse condition, the government made large-scale purchases from private industries. As a result, by June 1950, 70 to 90 percent of the Shanghai industries had resumed operations and by September of the same year most of the industries in this city had resumed normal operations. (Hsin Shang-hai Jen-pao, 28 May 51)
